

a fluid to be administered to the biological mass through the delivery conduit, and reclaimed by the collection conduit, wherein the system is adapted for fluid isolation in the biological mass, where the biological mass has at least one upstream channel and at least one downstream channel.